

Giving Thanks

Knightstown Elementary Students Enjoy Meal, Skits

Students at Knightstown Elementary School used story telling, songs, handmade costumes and traditional food to gain a better understanding of Thanksgiving last week.

Students, teachers, parents and food service employees worked together to create a special Thanksgiving presentation, which included a turkey and noodles lunch served by a group of volunteer mothers. Each place setting was decorated with a Thanksgiving-themed placemat designed by students.

Students sported a variety of costumes. Some were dressed as pilgrims, while others donned paper feathers and buck skins and went as Native Americans. One student even dressed as a turkey and took part in a humorous skit, which included the turkey being "plucked" by hungry pilgrims.

At the conclusion of the program, students thanked school food service workers for preparing the meal, and the mothers for volunteering to serve it.

Knightsstown Elementary student Jasmine Olivo (right) listens to a Thanksgiving poem as her classmate, Shelby Patton, looks on.

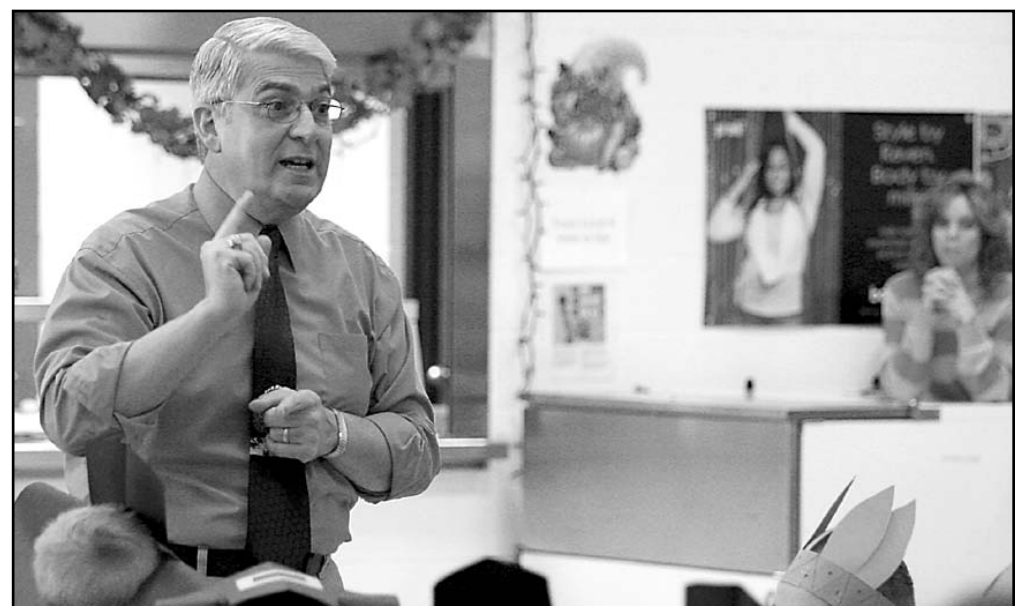

Lucas Haase (center) watches a skit along with two his classmates.

Dalton Moss enjoys the Thanksgiving feast.

"Native Americans" John Simmons (left) and Michael Weiland share a laugh. At right, Knightstown Elementary School Principal Dr. Tony Triarsi asks students to thank food service workers for preparing their Thanksgiving feast.

Photos by Eric Cox